what do coalitions do?

Churches come together, forming a coalition, to assist in putting Habitat's mission into action. Volunteers can help in many different ways from swinging a hammer to packing lunches to collecting donations.

where do we come from?

Inspired by the national Habitat for Humanity movement, a group of local Christians founded the grassroots organization in Cincinnati in 1986. The early Cincinnati Habitat was entirely volunteer run with large involvement from local churches. Over the next few decades, several independent Habitat organizations across the Greater Cincinnati region combined forces. In 2013, the largest of these, Cincinnati Habitat and TriState Habitat, merged to become Habitat for Humanity of Greater Cincinnati.

Today, Habitat for Humanity of Greater Cincinnati is the largest nonprofit homebuilder in the region. Together with homebuyer families, donors, and volunteers we have built over 680 high-quality modest homes and completed over 140 critical home repairs for low-income homeowners in our community. We operate five Habitat for Humanity ReStores, home improvement retail stores that fund about a third of our work and keeps usable materials from landfills.

Habitat Cincinnati works a number of congregations throughout the greater Cincinnati area. We have organized these congregations into various coalitions so they can work together to strengthen relationships and build beloved community while serving families in need of affordable housing. There are denominational coalitions, geographic coalitions, and affinity coalitions.
